Judicial Confirmation Logjam Must Be Broken

By Nancy L. Choy

President Clinton's selection of former U.S. Rep. Norman Y. Mineta to become the next secretary of Commerce--and the first Asian Pacific American to serve in the Cabinet--is a thrilling moment for the Asian Pacific American community. Fortunately, Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.), chairman of the Commerce Committee, promised to move the nomination "expeditiously."

If only other Asian Pacific American nominees were so lucky--particularly those facing the Senate Judiciary Committee, chaired by Orrin Hatch (R-Utah). Bill Lann Lee's nomination to be assistant attorney general for civil rights has been stalled for three years; for the past 2 1/2 years, he has occupied the post in an acting capacity.

Dolly Gee, nominated to the federal court in the Central District of California, would be the first Chinese American woman to serve on the federal bench. She has been waiting more than a year and still has not received a hearing on her nomination. The Senate has confirmed at least 25 judges who were nominated after Gee. None of those confirmed has been Asian Pacific American. More recently, four federal District Court nominees who were nominated as late as June had hearings scheduled for July. Disturbingly, two of those nominees--white males--were nominated on the same day as John Lim, a Korean American nominated to the Hawaii federal District Court. Lim, like Gee, has yet to receive a hearing.

And then there is Norman Bay, who was nominated in May to be U.S. attorney for New Mexico. If confirmed, Bay would be the only Asian Pacific American among the 93 U.S. attorneys. No hearing on his nomination is in sight.

The last Asian Pacific American judge to make it through the Senate Judiciary Committee--Susan Oki Mollway, now serving as a District Court judge in Hawaii--took 2 1/2 years to be confirmed.

Because this is a presidential election year, the confirmation process is likely to halt soon. No one questions the qualifications of these individuals to serve in the positions for which they have been nominated, so why are their nominations stalled?

Take Gee as an example. If confirmed, she would be only the seventh Asian Pacific American judge currently serving. Considering Asian Pacific Americans make up about 4% of the American population, the lack of

SIDEBARA RENEWED SENSE OF COMMITMENT TO THE COMMUNITY

The past year has been an incredible eye-opening experience for me. One year of law school altered my perception of truth and justice; one summer in the Capitol redefined my sense of civil rights advocacy and community activism.

As a local community advocate, I occasionally felt the desire to experience advocacy from a national perspective. This past summer, APABA-LA provided that perfect opportunity for me. Every summer, APABA-LA provides a scholarship to a Los Angeles law student for a law clerk position at the National Asian Pacific American Legal Consortium (NAPALC), a civil rights organization in Washington, D.C. and I was fortunate to be the recipient this year.

Having been an internship coordinator in the past, I expected to do my fair share of photo-copying and faxing. However, I was pleasantly surprised to be treated as a staff member of the NAPALC team. I was assigned to substantive projects, mainly focused on anti-Asian violence. As soon as I arrived, I was put to work on the Hate Crimes Prevention Act. NAPALC was an integral member of a coalition working to pass the Act. Working with two other interns, we attended meetings, conducted research, produced written materials, and participated in various legislative advocacy activities. On the day of the vote, we were present in the reception room of the Senate Chambers to witness the culmination of two weeks of intense research, phone calls, emails, and meetings. The Senate overwhelmingly passed the Act. Talk about seeing results! We were fortunate, however to be present at the tail end of a two-year long struggle. And the battle is not over yet. The Act is now in Committee.

I also had the opportunity to work on a specific case dealing with hate crimes and immigration. After working on a broad issue, it was a whole different challenge to work with a specific individual. I learned what it really meant to be sensitive, tactful, and resourceful. In addition to long-term projects, I also had the privilege of writing support letters for Norman Mineta's appointment as Secretary of the U.S. Department of Commerce, Dolly Gee's confirmation to the federal bench, and Dr. Wen Ho Lee's release on bail.

Last but not least, all work and no play makes anyone a dull person. In addition to my work at NAPALC, I actively participated in an activity that D.C. folks practice religiously: Happy Hour. With the help of old and new friends, I was exposed to the whole array of D.C. nightlife. Needless to say, my two and a half months in Washington D.C. this summer was beyond fantastic. Not only did I walk away with knowledge of new issues and developed skills, but a revived sense of commitment to the Asian Pacific American community and not to mention great relations and friendships.

Asian Pacific American representation on the federal judiciary--less than 1%--is appalling.

Gee is not a controversial choice. She is principally a labor and employment lawyer who has represented both management and labor. As an arbitrator or mediator, she has helped to resolve hundreds of disputes. Clinton has urged action by the Senate Judiciary Committee, as have California's Democratic Sens. Barbara Boxer and Diane Feinstein, U.S. Rep. Xavier Becerra (D-Los Angeles) and U.S. Delegate Robert A. Underwood (D-Guam). Typically, such actions result in movement by the committee. But for whatever reason, Gee's nomination is being treated as atypical.

Gee's support is not limited to Democrats. Among others, U.S. Rep. James E. Rogan (R-Glendale), one of the House impeachment managers, has written in support of her nomination. The chief judge of the court where she would be serving--already short-staffed, with four vacancies--also has written urging the committee to take action.

As long as the Senate refuses to consider Gee, justice will not be served. Justice will not be served for citizens who will be deprived of a fine jurist and will face ever-increasing delays caused by a backlog of cases. Justice also will not be served to the Asian Pacific American community, which is underrepresented in the judiciary. Over the past year, numerous groups have accused Republicans of treating minority judicial candidates unfairly. Acting on Gee's nomination would be a simple yet significant demonstration that Congress is willing to act in the interests of justice during an election year.

DID YOU KNOW?

In the entire State of California, there are only 22 certified Cantonese speaking court interpreters, 36 certified Vietnamese language interpreters, and 25 Korean interpreters. Even more disturbing, there are only 7 certified Japanese language interpreters and only 5 certified Tagalog interpreters. Criminal defendants who speak primarily Asian dialects are appearing in federal and state courts with greater frequency. These persons require the services of an interpreter during all phases of the proceedings, yet qualified Asian language interpreters are rarely appointed. Although a constitutional or statutory right to a competent language interpreter can be derived from a variety of sources, few jurisdictions have adopted certification requirements for Asian language interpreters, and judges normally lack the skills necessary to make these important decisions. As part of its goals, APABA seeks to ensure that all defendants are given a fair hearing or trial with the use of a qualified court interpreter where necessary. Please join us in our campaign to educate the community, the bench and the bar on this important issue.

APABA'S PRESIDENT JACQUELINE NGUYEN

By Ray Seo

Imagine this...you have just been assigned to prosecute an organized crime ring. As you embark on your investigation, you're no longer just a pen-wielding attorney...you become a P.I., no not a personal injury lawyer, a private investigator. You look for clues and facts to bring the crime ring down...a direct investigation might not suffice...remember, this is an infamous criminal organization you're dealing with...it may require undercover work...perhaps even subterfuge to get the evidence. Slowly, but surely, you meticulously build your case riding on the edge of fear and excitement you prosecute.

We can only imagine what this must feel like, but for Jacqueline Nguyen, it's her reality as a federal prosecutor specializing in white-collar and organized crime prosecution. Fortunately for the bad guys, Jacqueline's job doesn't always entail bringing down an organized crime ring, but there is one constant; mainly that Jacqueline has thrived in all facets of being a U.S. Attorney. In recognition of her outstanding work, Jacqueline has received numerous awards from the Department of Justice and federal agencies. Jacqueline believes that a federal prosecutor has a heavy responsibility to be fair and to exercise her discretion appropriately. Her view is that it's not about whether the individual prosecutor wins or loses. Rather, it's about achieving justice and following the law.

Aside from being a Federal Prosecutor, Jacqueline Nguyen is also the current President of APABA. Jacqueline has been active in the Asian bar scene for many years. She has served on the Board of Governors for the Japanese American Bar Association (1995-98), and as a co-chair for the Asian Concerns Committee (1994). She was also active in the effort to establish APABA.

As APABA's President, Jacqueline's primary goals are to build upon the momentum APABA established last year, broaden the diversity of its membership, as well as to serve underrepresented communities. It is important to Jacqueline that APABA maintains its inclusive theme by having members of all Asian Pacific communities unite under APABA.

In addition to being active in the Asian bars, Jacqueline also tries to fit in some pro bono work in her spare time. For example, this year, she volunteered for Public Counsel's Adoptions Project, representing foster parents wishing to adopt children from the foster care system.

“It is important to Jacqueline that APABA maintains its inclusive theme by having members of all Asian Pacific communities unite under APABA.”

Jacqueline credits her work ethic and drive to her parents. In 1975, her family fled a war-torn Vietnam to settle in La Crescenta California. Her parents at times worked two jobs in order to provide for a large family, which included Jacqueline and five brothers and sisters. Jacqueline says that whenever she thinks there's not enough time to do everything, she thinks of how much her parents have accomplished despite being forced to start all over again in their late-30s with nothing. Despite this beginning, Jacqueline worked hard and was accepted into Occidental college. After graduating from Occidental in 1987, she spent a year as a Los Angeles County Unified School District substitute teacher and a summer in Japan before matriculating into UCLA Law. After graduating in 1991, Jacqueline was immediately hired to work in civil litigation for Musick, Peeler, and Garrett. She worked there for three years before she joined the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Despite all her obligations, Jacqueline has found time to live a fulfilling personal life as well. Jacqueline has been happily married to her husband, Pio Kim (whom she met in her second year at UCLA Law), for seven years. Pio, who is also a prominent figure in the Asian community, served as President of KABA. This power couple recently welcomed a new baby boy, Nolan Kim, their first child. Jacqueline Nguyen, the federal prosecutor, the active leader in the Asian-American Community, and the dedicated wife and mother. Indeed, Jacqueline epitomizes what a great leader is, and for that we're all grateful to have her represent APABA as our President.

HELP HEAL THE BAY

Please join in the annual statewide Coastal Cleanup Day On Saturday, September 16, 2000, organized by the California Coastal Commission's Adopt-A-Beach Program and supporting organizations throughout the state. By cleaning up, collecting data on what you find, and recycling, you'll demonstrate that environmental stewardship protects our coast and waterways and is everyone's responsibility.

On this 16th annual Coastal Cleanup Day, residents from across the state will join together in a massive effort to maintain the beautiful California shoreline. Tens of thousands of volunteers will take to the beaches from San Diego to the Oregon border, to the lake front of Lake Tahoe, to the shorelines of inland creeks and rivers of Sacramento, Fresno, and other waterways throughout California. The common thread will be their individual and active commitment to maintaining the beauty and well-being of California's streams, rivers and ocean and protecting animals from the hazards of marine debris.

In 1998, over 52,000 Californians picked up over 1,500,000 pieces of debris that weighed in at over 600,000 pounds of trash and almost 54,000 pounds of recyclables. The collected data is a powerful voice for conservation and is used to influence governmental and corporate policy. The Center for Marine Conservation tabulates most items that are picked up on Coastal Cleanup Day.

In Southern California, the environmental group Heal the Bay will be organizing the event. Cleanup sites will be at 48 sites throughout the beaches, at creeks and rivers. Scuba divers and kayakers are also invited to participate by registering for one of three sites in Santa Monica, Marina del Rey, and Redondo Beach. For information, call 1-800-HEAL BAY.

Confidential information advise us that notables were out in force among the crowd that flocked to the June 29th MultiCultural Bar Alliance Reception. Agnes Chiu and Linda Sun were seen working the door; candidates Steve Cooley (D.A.) and Art Goldberg (L.A. City Council – his sister's seat) were seen working the crowd; and, finally, our divas – Mona Soo Hoo, Kathryn Hirano and Luci- Ellen Chun – were seen simply working it. You go, girls. Our sources spotted Judge Ron Lew, Greg Santiago, Diane Tan (with bodyguards King and Stephanie lurking nearby), Emma Ballesteros, law students Greg Wang (Whittier) and Sandra Lee (U. C. Davis), and SCCLA President Frank Chen.

Yes, our Frank Chen, by day, a committed lawyer/bar leader/community activist, but, by night, he is known as Frank Chen, certified salsa dance instructor to the stars, and his latest class included Teri Pham, David Halm, Melodee Yee, and many others who will bear witness to this unexpected avocation, and to Frank's amazing talent. You go, Pancho.

We got divas, dancers and (gulp) fundraisers. Led by Jacquelyn Nguyen, APABA stalwarts Luci- Ellen Chun, Diane Tan, Paula Daniels and Betty Chim, were seen boldly bidding and browsing at the WLALA Silent Auction at the downtown Museum of Neon Art; while, more recently, at the home of film producer Chris Lee, more funds were raised for Washington Governor Gary Locke, with Frank Chen, Betty Chim, Howard Halm, Karen Gee, Ted Lieu, and New York City Council candidate Rocky Chin, in attendance.

And, for the record, our sleepy little hamlet was chosen for the Democratic National Convention because Vice President Al Gore had such a good time at the NAPABA convention, not because of anybody's fondness for California girls; and they did not pick the Staples Center because APABA had the Bonaventure Hotel tied up with our last-Thursday-of-the-month Happy Hour. We told them they were more than welcome to join us. Staples was picked because of the concerts that opened there. Please, put those awful rumors to rest.

We hear the stars were really out for the DNC Reception at JANM, featuring newly appointed Presidential Cabinet Member Norman Mineta, Senator Daniel Inouye, Congressional candidate Mike Honda, and countless other political leaders, in addition to a host of APABA luminaries, like Jacquelyn Nguyen, Paula Daniels, Tammy Chung, Luci- Ellen Chun, Kathryn Hirano, Mona Soo Hoo, Diane Tan (with King and Stephanie there to hear Hiroshima) and our own California Democratic Convention Delegate lawyer/lecturer/leader Angela Oh, who brazenly declared that she was voting for Gore.

Thanks, bye and good luck to Luci Koh, who is leaving the APABA board and relocating to No Cal, and welcome and good luck to Social Committee Co-chair Belle Hsu, appointed to replace Luci. Congratulations to Bill Lann Lee on finally being appointed to lead the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department; to Kathryn Doi Todd, on her elevation to the California Court of Appeals, noting the unanimous acclaim from the legal community that preceded her selection (the Daily Journal called it a "lovefest"); and to our own legend Dolly Gee, on her marriage to Albert Wong, noting the unanimous acclaim from this legal community that has preceded her Presidential nomination to the Central District, and hoping for more good news in the next installment of IFD.

And remember, IFD is not a popularity contest and, till next issue, stay out of the Bushes.
